LINDEN HONEY

It arises from the nectar collected by bees from linden trees. It's light-amber in color liquid, to gold in the solid state. Has a characteristic scent of linden flowers and slightly spicy taste.

Thanks to the high content of essential oils that destroy microbes in the membranes mucous upper respiratory tract, is often used during the treatment of their inflammation, colds or flu.

This honey also works antipyretic and calming. Substances contained in linden flowers, which are carried along with nectar, have an expectorant effect.

HONEYDEW HONEY

It is produced from honeydew collected by bees, i.e. a sweet secretion of aphids or other insects of plant-eating juices. Its color is dark, from gray-green to almost black.

This honey is rich in resins, essential oils and macroelements. In comparison with nectar honey is usually characterized by a higher content of nitrogen compounds, minerals, dextrans, enzymes, acids organic and antibiotic substances. Its antiseptic, anti-inflammatory and expectorant effects makes honey work very well in colds, flu or pneumonia.

RAPSEED HONEY

It is one of the first honeys that bees produce after the winter. Due to the large content glucose very quickly crystallizes, its color is then light yellow, creamy, odor weak and taste sweet. Thanks to the creaming process, it is perfectly suitable for spreading bread.

In the composition of rapeseed honey, as in nectar derived from rape blossoms, occur essential oils, tannins, mustard compounds, flavonoids, bioelements, vitamins B, K and C, acid nicotinic acid, choline, coumarin, saponins and trace amounts of alkaloids. This honey is used also in diseases of the liver and bile ducts

BUCKWHEAT LINDEN HONEY

It is created thanks to the combination of nectar collected from buckwheat flowers and linden trees. Liquid has light brown with a reddish hue color. After crystallizing, it shines and creates a composition of colors from darker to light brown. Its sharp and distinct bitterish buckwheat flavor, which is here in predominance, it breaks the delicate linden flavor, making it more sweet and less burning.

Especially liked by confectioners, as an addition to cakes and gourmet beer and wine with an addition honey that perfectly enhances their taste. This honey works well in the prevention and treatment of heart disease and circulatory system, especially atherosclerotic medium. It is helpful in the treatment of vegetative neurosis, among others neurosis of the heart and stomach. In addition, it plays an important role as a hepatoprotective and detoxifying drug.
